Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design or CPTED provides us with an opportunity to design safer communities by reducing opportunities for crime that may be inherent in the design of structures or in the design of neighborhoods. The notion that the physical environment can either increase or reduce the opportunities for crime is not new. There is general understanding that if the environment is planned, designed and managed properly, certain types of crimes can be reduced and quality of life improves.

What is the Symposium?

It's a 3½ day intensive crime prevention conference that is held in a different location every two years. Presenters are select leading experts & practitioners that work in the field.

Who should attend?
